

Daily Gamecock Opinion

Requesting Statements

J.C. Vaught, Opinion Editor. Fall 2025

Purpose & Scope

This guide explains when to ask for an official statement, how to ask by email, and provides templates and examples for contacting universities, government agencies, companies, and other institutions. It is written for the Daily Gamecock Opinion section, but the practices apply broadly across student and professional journalism.

1 When you must seek a statement (right of reply)

Seeking comment is both an ethical obligation and a practical legal safeguard:

- Criticism or allegations: If an opinion piece criticizes a person or institution, you must ask them to respond before publication.
- Potentially harmful assertions: If your draft includes claims that could affect someone's reputation (e.g., negligence, incompetence, discrimination), offer a fair chance to respond; this can help demonstrate lack of malice and reduce libel risk.
- Policy or decision coverage: When discussing university or government actions, seek on-the-record reasoning, timelines, or corrective steps from the relevant office (PIO/press office, dean, agency spokesperson).

When it's optional but smart. If an opinion piece is primarily praise or personal reflection, comment is optional; however, if you cite new facts or statistics about an institution, confirm those details or offer a chance to clarify.

2 Who to contact

1. Universities: Start with the media relations/communications office. Your editor should have a contact there.
2. Government: Identify the agency's press office or public information officer (PIO); for elected officials, the press secretary. If facts hinge on records, consider a public-records request in parallel (FOIA/state open-records).
3. Companies/nonprofits: Use the media relations email or the executive responsible for the policy at issue; many list a press inbox specifically for requests for comment.

3 How to ask (email anatomy)

Subject line

Include outlet, topic, and a clear deadline. Concise subjects that signal the outlet and topic help sources triage quickly. Examples:

- Request for comment - USC housing waitlist concerns
- Media request (Daily Gamecock) - Student fees oversight

Opening and context

- Identify yourself and the Daily Gamecock.
- State the opinion thesis you are testing.
- List specific questions tied to that thesis.

Ground rules on attribution

Default is on the record. The Daily Gamecock does not accept “Off the record” or “on background” sources and statements without explicit approval from the managing editors. If a source requests background for safety or sensitivity, confirm the terms with your editors.

Reasonable time & follow-up

Give institutions a fair window to respond relative to your publication schedule; document attempts to reach them and note “declined to comment” only after bona fide efforts. If time is short, say so explicitly and offer phone availability for faster turnaround.

4 Email templates (copy, customize, send)

A. University

Subject: Request for comment — [Topic]

Hello,

I'm [Name], an opinion writer with the Daily Gamecock. I'm writing about [thesis in one sentence].

To ensure fairness and accuracy, could I get a statement on the following?

1. What specific policies or constraints led to [issue] this semester?
2. What steps, if any, will USC take before [date] to address [concrete fix]?
3. How should affected students seek help in the meantime (office, link, timeline)?

Thank you,

Name

Daily Gamecock | [email] | [phone]

B. Government agency

Subject: Media request (Daily Gamecock) — [Agency] comment on [policy]

Hello [Press Officer],

I'm covering [policy/action] and its impact on [group]. For accuracy, please provide on-the-record responses to:

1. What is the agency's stated rationale and legal authority for [action]?
2. What data informed the decision? Please link to any public reports.
3. What recourse is available to affected students/residents?

Thank you,

Name

Daily Gamecock | [email] | [phone]

C. Company/nonprofit

Subject: Request for comment — [Company] policy on [issue]

Hello,

In a forthcoming column about [issue], I’m asking [Company] to respond on the record to:

1. Current policy on [specific practice] as it applies to students.
2. Any planned changes and the timeline.
3. Your response to critiques that [one-sentence critique].

Thank you,

Name

Daily Gamecock | [email] | [phone]

D. Short-notice follow-up / voicemail script

Subject: Quick follow-up for comment by 2 p.m. ET today — [topic]

Hi [Name] — following up on the note below. My print deadline is 2 p.m. ET today. Even a brief statement addressing items #1–#2 would be appreciated. I’m at [phone] and can read the questions aloud if helpful. Thank you.

Voicemail: “Hi, this is [Name] with the Daily Gamecock. I’m requesting comment on [topic] by [deadline/timezone]. My questions are [one-line list]. Please call [phone] or reply to [email]. Thank you.”

5 Examples (good vs. needs work)

Good

Subject: Request for comment by 4 p.m. ET — Student fee transparency

Identifies outlet and deadline; states thesis; asks concrete, answerable questions; offers phone; clarifies on-the-record.

Needs work

Subject: Question

Vague subject; no deadline; asks for “any comment” without context; only background questions; no attribution terms.

6 Documentation & transparency

- Keep a log of who, when, and how you sought comment (email, phone, in-person); save screenshots.
- If no response (generally 48hrs), write: “The university did not respond to questions by publication time.”

7 Quick checklist

1. Is there criticism or an allegation? If yes, seek comment.
2. Have you written the thesis clearly in your request?
3. Are the questions specific (who/what/when/how) and answerable?
4. Did you contact the right person/office and provide a phone number?
5. Did you document attempts and fairly characterize non-responses?
