In recent years, the number of opinion pieces going out of the Daily Gamecock has dropped dramatically, going from nearly 500 pieces in 2013 to a measly 50 in 2025. This number is even lower at 24 once you remove comics from the tabulations. In parallel with this change, the 'hot-take' factor for these pieces has also dropped in a linear fashion along with the number of pieces. This only leaves readers with one question: what the heck happened to 'freedom-of-press' and hot opinions at USC?

These rapid changes, occurring over the course of 12 years has not gone unnoticed by editors for the Daily Gamecock, with the most recent editor noting that they wanted to "boost engagement and retention" within the branch. In an interview with a current Daily Gamecock Writer, JC Vaught said "Daily Gamecock has been doing tons of stuff to boost retention and I'm hopeful that it will bring the Daily Gamecock back to its former glory days - specifically regarding opinion writers."

Create and set an Abstract, a 2-sentence summary

In recent years, opinions at USC seem to have gotten colder and less of them seem to have any gravitas to them, resulting in a weak free-speech environment.
